

UNIVERSITY COUNCIL
FOR
ART EDUCATION

Presents a Seminar on
USING TECHNOLOGY TO ADVANCE
Museum and School-Based Learning
at
The New Ruth and Harold D. Uris Center for Education
The Metropolitan Museum of Art*

Friday, February 1, 2008
8:30 AM to 1:00 PM

*J*oin us for this half-day seminar at the Metropolitan Museum of Art to explore the innovative ways in which New York City art institutions have integrated online resources, distance learning and other forms of technology into their education programs. The impact on school-based learning will be discussed. Continental breakfast will be provided; lunch is on your own.

Seminar Highlights

Introduction to the new Ruth and Harold D. Uris Center for Education
Tours of the Nolen Library, Teacher Resource Room, the Art Study Room, and art studios
Examples of distance learning projects at the Metropolitan Museum of Art
Discussion of electronic resources in the Thomas J. Watson Library
Overview of the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum's digital workshops for teens combining in-depth gallery discussions with hands-on projects using digital media
Engagement through technology at the Museum of Modern Art

For questions, please contact Seminar Chair, Karen Rosner at krosner@schools.nyc.gov

* Enter the Museum through the parking lot or the Uris Center ground level entrance on 5th Avenue